Foreword

A SERVICE for Hamilton being the dearest thing we know, and such as any man would be glad to surrender time and pains to perform, it has been easy for us, the editors, trustees of the HAMILTONIAN for the Class of 1916, to pass many pleasant hours in preparing this book.

This statement smacks of radicalism inasmuch as the traditional province of the editor is to emit a plaintive wail over his inky struggles. That we do nothing of the sort is due to our own peculiar ideas.

But do not, Kind Reader, imagine that this book rolled from the presses turned by fairy hands. Our labors have been very real. They have been increased because we have attempted extensive innovations. The articles by Senator Root and other prominent Alumni we believe to be of inestimable value. To have such words from such Hamilton men bound in one book where your son of the future Hamilton may read, will prove a safe guide to the haven of "Carissima."

Herein are many tales of Hamilton life told in picture and word; all bear the message of a staunch and true College which holds thorough manliness as its abiding principle.

Mr. Alumnus, may you feel the warm arms of your Alma Mater linking you close as you scan these pages. The message to you is direct and, we hope, sweet and true.

Mr. Other Reader, may you learn within these covers the true story of a College small enough to be great, great enough to be small.

The gates are flung wide. Enter ye in to read!

Dedication

EVERY once in a while there live men who, by combined loyalty and modesty, join the ranks of the "inheritors of unfulfilled renown." They give money, and nobody hears of it; give time, but never boast of it; smilingly give their hearts, and show no token of it. To them words are pitiful tributes, yet meagre words can perhaps point out in Frederick W. Griffith, '86, the ideal which the best in Hamilton produces, the type for which the College will ever strive, the goal which her men will seek.

Frederick Winter Griffith was born in Phelps, New York, on December 17, 1858. In 1882 he came from the Phelps Classical Union School to Hamilton College, where he graduated in 1886 with the Bachelor's degree in Arts. As an undergraduate he was a member of the Delta Upsilon and Phi Beta Kappa fraternities. For a year after graduation he was instructor at the Kirkland Hall Preparatory School in Clinton, but the call of commercial life took him in 1887 to Palmyra, where he became connected with the Garlock Packing Company. In 1900 he was elected to membership in the New York State Assembly, and for three years he served his state there. He was returned as state senator in 1910, again to give three years to public service; and those who know the legislative record of the senator say that he is not through at Albany. The alumni of Hamilton recognized his worth in 1907, making him a trustee of the College.

Mr. Griffith's achievements in the business world are witnessed by his position as Vice-President and Treasurer of the Garlock Packing Company. His eminence as a legislator is testified by his record at Albany. His success in his relations to the College lies in something higher than his Trusteeship, as "Grif" himself will tell you: it lies in his place in the hearts of the undergraduates.

For to us undergraduates who knew the genial "Senator Grif" who is behind the man of affairs, he is much more than all his honors; we know him as the commercial world cannot. One undergraduate felt that he was getting an insight into the real "Grif" in true Pinkerton style, when he overheard a conversation between him and a faculty member on the occasion of one of the Senator's trips to the Hill.

"Well, you've two sons here now to bring you back," said the Professor. "We ought to see you often now."

"Two!" echoed "Grif." "Two? Why, I've got two hundred here."

And that is just what would strike you first about him: his absolute loyalty to Hamilton. You would notice, too, his boyishness, for "Grif" has created his own beautiful fable of life, and has decided that most important of all in this world is the great Theorem of the Liveableness of Life. He has not forgotten the sentiment of this place. In the world that is harsh and grown-up and tired, he remembers the fine cleanliness of the slide, the perfect loveliness of June, the genuineness of friendships—on Hamilton's Hill. To him the manuscript of Youth has not been closed without his noticing its fragrance. And his College has become for him a splendid dream, where his heart is forever homing. Shaemas O'Sheel has put it well:

"He whom a dream hath possessed knoweth no more of roaming;
All roads and the flowing of waves and the speediest flight he knows;
But wherever his feet are set, his soul is forever homing
And going, he comes, and coming, he heareth a call and goes."

So with silent generosity he gives his gifts, and craves no marble tablets.

We know that "Grif" would not be pleased with overmuch of praise; candied tongues never go far with him. He's only a quiet little man, who keeps his ear to the ground to catch the first murmur of discontent, and then takes it on his shoulders to see that all's well with his Alma Mater. He keeps the blood circulating in the veins of the College body politic. He vibrates in harmony with every delicate motion of its mechanism.

And because he is the loyal "Grif" whom we revere, his influence will not fade away like a song or a dream when he no longer climbs this hillside. The influence of great men is an intangible thing that lives long after their names are forgotten. And so his influence will live, as long as the countless stars continue to watch over our Lady on the Hill, and the Oriskany sings on its way to the sea,

"You still shall live,
Where breath most breathes, even in the mouths of men."

The New Hamilton

The breaking of a new era has come to Hamilton under a careful policy of progressivism inaugurated by the Board of Trustees during the past College generation. The Class of 1916 was the first to benefit materially by the change.

The group system of electives, insuring greater freedom in choice of subjects than Hamilton men have ever before enjoyed; the broadening of the curriculum; the widening of the doors to freshmen by permitting them to enroll with only three years of Latin, have been the criteria of these new days.

Yet there has been no withdrawal from the sturdy insistence upon classicism which has made Hamilton unique in America's educational scheme, nor will there ever be. The worth of intensive classical study is too deeply ingrained here to be uprooted.

That the College has gained materially by the active policy of the Board of Trustees will become increasingly evident with years. Hamilton's new day has come.

The Campus Beautiful

"Dear is thy homestead glade and glen."

The Chapel

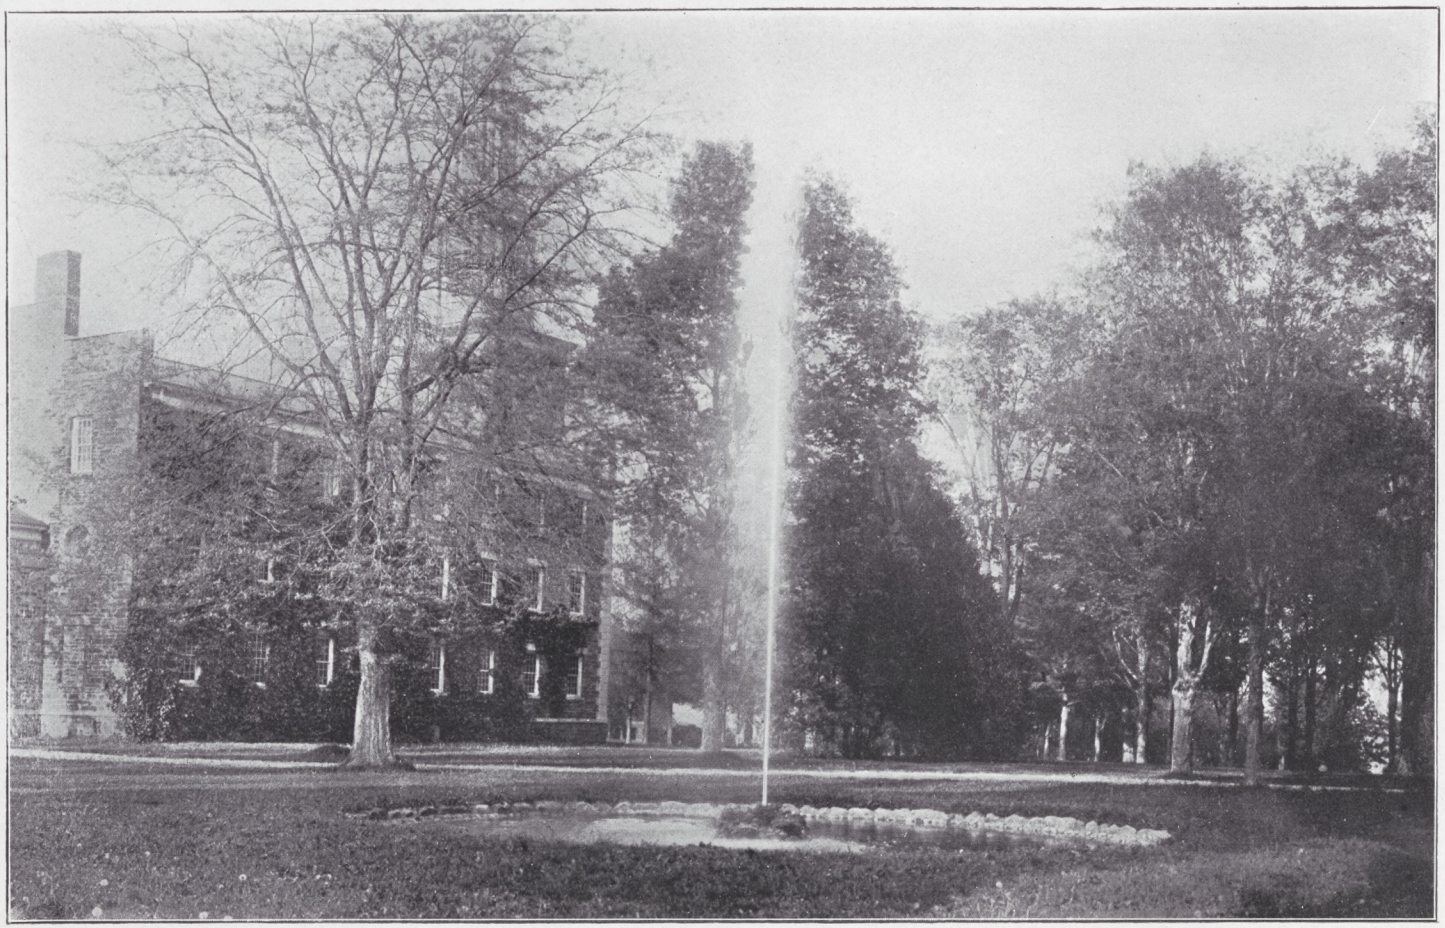
Whene'er returning from the "cold
Cold world" we seek thine arms once more,
We turn in reverence to this door,
This center, Alma Mater, of thy love.
Within its sacred precinct as of old,
We bow in gratitude to Him above.

The Entrance to the Campus

A simple gateway to the grounds
Where nation-leaders have been bred.
Our Alma Mater hence has sped
Full many generations' pride.
Nor fence nor wall her Campus bounds;
Her fostering arms are open wide.

The Fountain

From out a grassy-bordered pool
A jet of flashing, silvery spray
Breaks in the air and falls away
Into its shallow sunlit bowl,
While borne on every zephyr cool
Its iridescent atoms roll.



"Where Twines the Path"

Beneath yon heaven-verging pines,
The whispering sentries of the trees;
Amid low shrubs whence every breeze
Attaric fragrance may distil,
There grace with stateliness combines
"Where twines the path" on College Hill.

The Snow-bound Chapel

Snow-carpeted the campus lies,
With myriad dazzling gems inset,
The skyline girdled with a net
Of crystal-traceried attire.
Long arching vistas harmonize
And blend to meet the Chapel spire.

The Quadrangle

Between yon poplars' stately mean
A glimpse of classic columns tall,
And farther on Carnegie Hall.
Amid the spread of velvet sod,
Before them all in irised sheen,
The fountain, ruler of the quad.

Alma Mater

A matchless quatrain of the song of life,
Dictated by thy loving heart,
Enhanced by all thy poet-art,
To make its too brief lines and strains with melodies of pleasure rife.
Four years may wane and fade into the past, but still
The memories of these love-protected days,
Echoing our gratitude to hymn thy praise
Will witness to the glories of our College Hill.
Thy sons, thy gems, encircle now thy brow
In honor, noble Foster-Mother thou!

What Hamilton Means to Me

HAMILTON has made it her especial province, while the great revolving years have passed her door, to send forth into the annual procession men who have learned to use their manhood and their brains to bettering the tradition of mankind. A writer in the following pages says that Hamilton has produced more eminent men than any other college of the same size that he knows of. Our own testimony is that these men have not only attained, but have preserved undimmed their affection for Hamilton.

"What Hamilton Means to Me" is the outgrowth of a desire to know which of the many keys to Hamilton's treasure-house unlocks the dearest store. Hon. Elihu Root, '64, tells us, and through us the world, what he believes our most priceless possession to be. So does Chester S. Lord, '73, one of the nation's greatest journalists, and Samuel Hopkins Adams, '91, James Arthur Seavey, '90, and Henry Kitchell Webster, '97, all men of pronounced literary ability and of much contemporary fame. We thank them for pausing from their busy days to give to Hamilton and to all friends of Hamilton the sterling tribute herein contained.

They have looked back for us over the flight of time and succession of men to their own days about the bubbling fountain of the quadrangle. They speak of eminent professors whose names are our cherished traditions, of Hamilton life swift generations agone. They speak it sturdily, for that is the Hamilton way, and each has touched what seems to him the strongest chord in the old song of college days. Our ears cleave to the witching melody.

Hamilton, My Alma Mater

HON. ELIHU ROOT, '64.

THE original qualities and standards of an old institution are transmitted through a long and continually changing series of individual members who differ widely from each other, but who, coming find, and going leave, the institutions always essentially the same. Great endowments, stately buildings, public favor and prosperity, cannot produce or take the place of that indefinable and mysterious quality which has been transmitted from a remote past, which has persisted through many changing years and many passing lives, and which gives to the institution a personality of its own, a continuance of the life breathed into it at the moment of its birth. Each new element that enters into the work of such an institution comes under the domination not of this man or that, but of the potent spirit which gave life to the institution and molds its traditions, its habits of thought and feeling and action, its purposes and its aspirations.

No mortal now can inspire me with half the reverence and admiration that I felt for the teachers of Hamilton fifty years ago. There are no better men than they. There never can be. But I am bound to say that Hamilton is a better college than it was then. Her work is better done and her students are better educated. I wish to say something about the college that can be illustrated by reference to the group of teachers who were here fifty years ago—my own father, Oren Root, and his son, Oren Root, who in succession filled the Chair of Mathematics in the college for fifty-eight years; Edward North, Professor of Greek for forty-eight years; Charles Avery, for twenty-five years Professor of Chemistry; Christian Henry Frederick Peters, the Astronomer for thirty-two years in the Litchfield Observatory; and Anson Judd Upson, for twenty-one years Professor of Rhetoric. Their students doubtless soon forgot the most of what they learned from book and lecture; but their students never could escape the deep and lasting impressions upon their characters, their tastes, and their intellectual methods. These professors were poor as the world goes, but they had a wealth that money cannot create. They loved their subjects and were happy in their work. They rejoiced in the exercise of their powers. They were content with simple pleasures. They filled the atmosphere about them with an enthusiasm for learning and literature. They sought for truth as one who strives in a game. They never talked or thought about money or investments or profits. They took little heed of all those things for which men are striving and wearing out their lives in the market places of a materialistic civilization.

For a boy to live with such men, to be close to them during four of the most impressionistic years of youth, to observe and become accustmed to their simple and sincere lives, without money, made happy by the pleasures of the intellect and taste, to get their standards and become impressed by their estimates of the values of life, and to learn enough out of books in the meantime to understand it all—that is an education beyond price.

And this is the true history of Hamilton. Before the coming of the group that I have named, their predecessors running back to the wilderness days did the same. Their successors are now doing the same. It is something that the great university cannot do. With all that the great university gains, it continually loses something with its growth, and this is what it loses—the personal touch and the development of character. It is something that only the small college can do, and only the small college with the right spirit.

Hamilton does it because the spirit of the founding in the wilderness persists. She has held to the old faith. She has never sought to be a vocational institution. She does not teach men to be lawyers or doctors or clergymen or bankers or farmers. She is an educational institution. She seeks to develop, to train, to form, to educate youths to be men competent to fit themselves for any vocation. She has been kept true by her traditions by the strain of simple farmer boys who have come plodding over the hills to her examinations, by the great proportion of her students, who come not because they are sent or because it is the correct thing to do, but because they are eager to make their way in the world.

The richest possessions of the institution are the multitude of lives, past and present, that would never have been educated if the college had not been here; the intelligences that would not have been enlarged by learning and literature; the spirits that would not have been quickened but for her; the unrecorded influences for the betterment of a thousand communities to which her graduates have gone; the part she has played in the development of our country along lines of Christian civilization. The great thing to be said is that the college always has been, in its essential character, the same institution which drew its life, in the wilderness, from the struggles and sacrifices of Kirkland—always inspired by the same spirit, faithful to the same cause, and working out the same beneficent purpose.

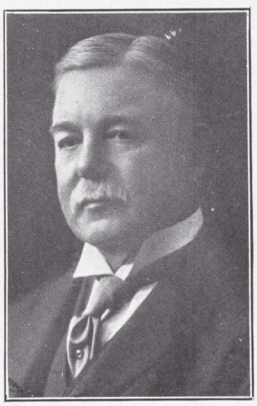
What Hamilton Has Done for Me

CHESTER S. LORD, '73.



I THINK it was the scholarly atmosphere, the literary fragrance of things around the good old college, that set me thinking; the personal contact with two hundred eager, joyous, purposeful young fellows that inspired my first real ambition; their energetic activities that aroused my first sense of real competition; an appreciation of the privileges of study that gave a first realization of the possibilities of life—and they came to me ere I had been there a fortnight.

A lot of things do not occur to us until called to our attention; a lot of problems have been worked out by others that never suggested themselves to us. Indeed, education consists largely in discovering and utilizing the discoveries of others. The discovery constitutes an awakening.

I was a country boy not versed in the niceties of manner or of chess and careless of many things that had not come to my attention. Life in general was more crude in rural Northern New York fifty years ago. The environment of the hamlet did not make for polish. It was in college that the value of correct conduct and personal presence, of ease of manner and of gentlemanly courtesy first attracted my attention. Ah, what a teacher is example—and it is in a college of just this size that these influences are most potent. There is exactly enough of commingling with students, exactly enough of that splendid comradeship between the boys themselves and between them and the teaching staff to inspire thought and ambition and longings, as well as to take the greenness out of a boy and reveal to him the asset value of refinement. But when it comes to eliminating greenness, the fraternities beat all creation. Can I ever forget those young gentlemen from Syracuse?

The members of the faculty were most inspiring and helpful. Professor North impressed me amazingly with a plea for memorizing. As a part of our performances in Greek he asked us to recite from memory certain passages of the text. "If you really commit this section to memory," he said, "you will find yourself repeating it to yourself many times during the rest of your life, and with very great pleasure: and the same is true not only of this Greek but of other great poems in English and of the masterpieces of English prose." It was Professor Upson who, criticizing my wretched attempt at declamation, said, "When you address an audience the assumption is that you know more about your subject than the audience does. Therefore, instead of faltering or being ill at ease, you should assume just enough superiority to speak with boldness and with authority." The value of this hint to me was in its adaptation to a hundred other situations rather than to public speaking.

And to dear good Professor Root, Senior, I am profoundly grateful for constant help through all these years, for he said to me: "Think it out—think, think, think—not for a minute, or a minute and a half, but for an hour or a day, if necessary. You can solve any problem by thought and study."

I am impressed with the super-excellence of Hamilton's system of instruction. I thoroughly believe in the classroom system, its intimacy with text-books, its memorizing, its invitations to questioning, its facilities for estimating the abilities of fellow students, and the help derived from their recitations as well as your own, its close association with the instructor. The lecture system is admirable and necessary, but it is the better adapted to post-graduate work or to specialization. To obtain fullest benefit from a lecture, one should give to it absorbing attention, one should also take voluminous notes of it. But unless one has instinctively a genius for reporting, the mental and physical effort involved in writing the notes confuses the receptive faculty and the memory. The lecture does not afford that intimacy with a subject that obtains in a class room. Yet present day tendency in the universities and in some colleges is to exalt the lecture and minimize the class room.

In a large city acquaintanceship runs in circles. If you are a lawyer you come to know many lawyers, judges, and their following. If you belong to a board of education you meet several hundred persons through that medium. In your large club you find scores of men whom you rarely meet anywhere else. In your boyhood home you have another circle—and so on, through your social, business or public life. Of all my associations my college association has been the most enjoyable and profitable. You cannot avoid a lasting interest, almost an affection for every man you knew in college, and you come to know with almost equal intimacy many who preceded or followed you there. In addition to my classmates I have been honored with the friendly, helpful acquaintance and in many cases the intimate friendship of Chancellor Upson, Vice-President Sherman, ex-

Senator Elihu Root, Judge Truax, Judge Duell, Judge Blackmar, Judge Maynard, Judge Cox, Henry Harper Benedict, Dexter North, Professor Burdick, Alexander Soper, Editor George E. Dunham, John N. Beach, Sam Adams, Arthur Seavey, H. B. Thompkins, Dwight Holbrook, the Rev. Anthony Evans, George Hastings, and very many more—and in my opinion they are the very best kind of men this country produces.

Now the point is this: I would not have had the friendship and the help of these men if I had not gone to Hamilton College. I know not another college where I could have made such valuable acquaintances—certainly not in a big college. I do not know of another college that, in proportion to its size, turns out so many successful and conspicuous men.

A Letter Home

ALMA MATER:

Nearly a quarter of a century ago I went out from your doors with your Godspeed in my heart. Something of you I took with me. No youth in the formative period of his manhood could spend four years in the shadow of your buildings and not be imbued with the spirit and tradition which were there before the walls were built and will survive after the stones have crumbled. Today, despite the years, I realize that there is no thought, no endeavor, no ambition of mine which does not draw some part of its vitality from you.

Some debts defy the meticulous reckonings of the ledger. Shall I say to you that I have succeeded in this venture because of the A. B. C. well-learned in one recitation room, failed in that because of foregone opportunities of X. Y. Z. whilst I played truant from another? Can I cast a balance of so-much-worth-per-lesson and keep it entered up to date in my Book of the years? Life is not calculated to such petty niceties. But for whatever I am, for the training that has fitted me to front the world and make a place in it, for the standards below which I dare not decline for shame of you, for the inspiration from the better men who carried your message before me—for these I loyally confess the debt beyond all payment.

Memory, a prism which distorts while it irradiates, throws its fairest hues on strange little phases of the past. It is not—this much I may confess openly to you, Alma Mater, to you who understand all things—the classic atmosphere of your academic rooms nor the inspirational influence of your forum that claims precedence in my mind as I look back. There are more personal and more unforgetable things that cling: the smell of the trodden grass on the football field, the point of conduct that I and my friend fought out through anger to honor, the Adventure of the Chapel Bell (which had a good deal more to do with anger—of the authorities—than with honor to anyone), the splendor of young voices singing together in the moonlight, the companions close about me whom I loved or respected or hated, as the case might be, with all the fervor of lively blood—Is that part of a Classical Education, Alma Mater? Perhaps. Who shall say that it is not, when Stevenson proclaims that all experience is education, whether the book in which one reads be integral calculus, or consist in hearing the band play in the gardens? At all events it is what you gave me, and it is what I could have got in no such intensity at any one of our huge department stores of learning; perhaps, indeed, at no other college. It is what I fondly believe! And for that the debt is unpayable.

Books give us our ideas. Men give us our ideals. From the daily and intimate contact with the ripe scholarship of Old Greek and Brandt and Bristol, the splendid Christian manhood of Hopkins and Hoyt, the brilliant, out-giving mentality of Square Root, the broad, clear, bracing philosophy of Terrett, no mind not impenetrably shut against good could fail to draw imperishable influence. Such contact is possible only to the close-knit democracy of the small college. Thereby the college preserves its continuity of tradition; this is its vital virtue, to build character from character.

At one of our cherished traditions I can now smile. Perhaps you, too, Alma Mater, old yet ever young enough to keep pace with the changing years, will even smile with me. What a shibboleth in those days was Oratory, with a rotund and rolling O! As we worshipped it then it was a hard and fast practice of deep-toned mouthings and powerful gesturings, expressive of the thought or lack of thought of some other person. It has always seemed to me that oratory, in that sense of theatrical repetition, is the most meretricious of the arts; hardly to be reckoned as better than their flash sister, indeed; a sort of sleight-of-speech employed to cloak dubious projects, cozen a jury, or bemuse a mob. In your halls of today, at least, it has been superseded by the truer and finer standard whereby men are taught first to think clearly and afterward to clothe their thought in clear, appropriate, and expert speech.

But better than all technique of speech or thought, better than any detail of classicism or achievement in scholastics, is this gift of yours to your sons, Alma Mater; that you enable them to touch life, within your walls, at many angles; sending them forth, finally, not specialists but fashioned and ripened minds.

Mother of memories, above the arch of that invisible portal through which your brood pass in unending procession, I see graven an inscription, expressive of the spirit of your inspiration; the finest human saying ever written for humans; a motto for every alumnus of your breeding:

Homo sum: nil humani a me alienum puto.

Yours ever loyally,

SAMUEL HOPKINS ADAMS, '91.

Choosing a College

JAMES ARTHUR SEAVEY, '90.

THE choice of a college should depend, largely, on the aim and mental bent of the young man doing the choosing. In these days, when time, next to ability and energy, is the chief factory in a life success, the average young American cannot afford to do college work twice. If, for instance, my son were to be any kind of a scientific engineer, if he were to be a chemist or a physicist or a man of commerce or finance, and if he had to get right on the job of making his living as soon as he got out of college, I don't believe I would send him to Hamilton. But if he were to be a parson, a lawyer, a man of letters or one of any other profession, I would urge, without ceasing, that he choose Hamilton.

It is not because I am one of her sons that I say, unqualifiedly, Hamilton is the best all 'round college in this country. Its aim and purpose should not be mistaken. It is not a university and it is not a technical school and God forbid that it should ever become either. It is just "the college on the hill," but it knows how to turn out men who "make good" and it isn't her fault if they don't, and that reminds me of a story:

When I was in preparatory school and had decided that I wanted to go to college, my father told me that, within the limits of the paternal pocketbook, I could choose any college I saw fit. As I remember those days, that matter of a college choice was about the only one in which that Maine father, with a steel spinal column and steel vertebræ, ever allowed me to be a free agent. I decided on one of the famous smaller colleges in New England. I went there for Commencement. At that time I was particularly interested in speaking and writing. I have gained more sense since. I heard the prize speakers and the Commencement orations and I concluded that, if what I heard was the best goods in that line the college could show, the goods weren't good enough.

Therefore, I packed up my little old carpet bag and went home. The Superintendent of Public Instruction in the place where I lived was a Hamilton man and a very good friend of mine. In the following week the Hamilton Commencement was to take place and this genial and kindly educator asked me to spend the week with him in Clinton. That week settled the matter of a college for me. The beautiful campus, the wonderful hill and the oratory did the business. In the vernacular of this present year of grace, believe me, that was some speaking! And so I went to Hamilton. If I were going to do the same thing over again and were going to earn my living in any one of the professions, except any of the purely scientific, I would make the same choice.

Any young man intending to be a lawyer, doctor, preacher, teacher or writer ought to have a college education before he takes the special fitting for his life work. A knowledge of the classics, of higher mathematics, of higher English, of speaking, writing, debating and some science makes him infinitely better equipped to take up the study of his chosen profession than if he had not gone to college. Personally, I believe that a man would become a better hod carrier for having a college education, but I don't try to inflict that view on the average hod carrier.

Now to be specific: Are you, my dear boy, over there at Exeter or Andover or Wilbraham or Pomfret or Hotchkiss or Groton, or in any one of the high schools anywhere in the land, thinking of being a lawyer? If you are to be a lawyer, your first business will be to get business. And when you get it, the only way you will hold it and get more, will be through your ability to convince courts and juries that you always have the best of the right and the law. You will not be able to read law, with the intelligence that you should if you are not able to read Latin. No college gives a better and, I had almost said, as good a classical training as does Hamilton. There you debate before your fellows in the class room, with the incentive of a prize debate appointment at Commencement time of that glorious senior year when finis opus coronat. Then you have your regular chapel appearances in essay, declamation and oration, to say nothing of the class room work in essay. Besides, you get the fundamentals of law, plenty of history and a modern language course that you couldn't forget if you would. I know, because I took it, and I love Professor Brandt just the same, and even Professor Shepherd, though he was an infant in arms on that far agone day when I was graduated.

And to that other dear boy, in the same schools, or another, who has heard the voice that was heard in the far Judean hills! If you are going to do the Master's work in the world and if you cannot tell the Master's story effectively and well, if you cannot, by sound argument and sane eloquence, make the world appreciate the practical value of right living and clean thinking, you will not have hastened the dawn of the milennium morning. There is the technique of preaching, just as there is the technique of music or the technique of the drama. You will get the fundamentals and the elaborations at Hamilton. Go there.

And to the young gentlemen who are going to write the literature of the future: It must be quite obvious to you that the more you are made to write and the more your writing is intelligently criticised, the better trained writers you become. If your college requires class room essays, chapel essays and the opportunity of fairly rich essay prizes and prize orations every year, as is the case at Hamilton, you will be turned out, theoretically and practically, good writers. While the cry of literature is a far cry, it takes exact tolls of those who answer. Stuff will not pass for literature in the seats of the critics. If you have a writing bent, Hamilton will bend that bent into a complete circle. If you haven't a writing bent, you would better not lean toward literature at all.

One more word and I am done: The boy in preparatory school who loves to "fuss" in the chemical or physical laboratory, dreams of the time when he will become a great physician or a great surgeon. I have often thought that the office of the healer or the setter of broken bones or the kneader of broken muscles is a greater office than that of him who administers the Last Sacrament.

The young man who wishes to follow in the steps of Hippocrates may wonder why it is that Hamilton should be the college for him. When the young doctor has entered upon the practice of his profession, he is called upon, sooner or later, to read a paper before this or that academy of medicine. The papers which a doctor reads before his fellows do more to make or mar his reputation than any other one thing that he may do, except to make a mistake in diagnosis. A doctor who is a graduate of Hamilton, because of his training there, will be able to write a much better paper for his academy than the graduate of some other institution which has not and cannot give similar training.

And so, you embryo doctors, lawyers, preachers, teachers and writers, look over Hamilton before you choose your college. It has the best buildings of any college of its size or twice its size in all America. It's gymnasium and its athletic field turn out young gentlemen that win pennants. If you don't believe what I have said about buildings, ask Andrew Carnegie. He knows something about college buildings, even if he doesn't know anything about steel making. If you don't believe what I say about athletics, consult the Hamilton records.

And when you young gentlemen in the preparatory schools of the country, heirs apparent to all the future, have decided upon Hamilton as the college of your choice, you will never regret it, to the longest day you live; and when "the scroll has been rolled away," you will wish even that your last resting place might be by the Norths and the Roots and the Peters and the Hopkins in the "boneyard" overlooking the Oriskany as it sings its way to the sea.

"What Do You Want?"

HENRY KITCHELL WEBSTER, '97.

I FANCY most men would find it difficult to draw up a letter of recommendation for their mothers. I know I should. And if I am going to write something about Hamilton College as a place its present students are lucky to have chosen and that future students will do well to choose, I must contrive, for the moment, to forget the Alma Mater of my personal affections and the dear memories and associations that surround her. I must stop thinking about her, and begin thinking about it, in as sentimental a manner as possible. And following the inculcations of Junior debate, I will begin with a few damaging admissions:

If I were a multi-millionaire of unlimited altruism, I shouldn't try to provide every boy in the United States with an adequate preparatory schooling and then send him to Hamilton; which is another way of saying that I regard the education I got at Hamilton as good only for a certain sort of person, and that I think its lucky for the country that that is not the only sort we have got.

And I am willing to admit. also, that in a certain very real sense, ignorance, rather than knowledge, is power. The man to whom only one thing is worth while—who can see and believe in only one thing—will go further in the direction of that thing and come nearer to attaining it, than the man who can see two things, or a thousand things, each with a certain validity of its own.

The sapling in the forest, that sees only a tiny circle of blue sky exactly overhead, will grow to be a taller tree than the one that commands a full horizon from an open hill-top. Well, and it's a valid thing to be a tall tree. The world would get on badly without them. Indeed, it calls the tall trees successes—men who have got higher up in this or that department of endeavor than their competitors.

So, exceptions apart (and I am perfectly willing to admit they exist. Senator Root, over the page, here is tall enough for anybody, despite the spread of his branches) if you elect to plant yourself upon the open summit of, say, our College Hill, where the intellectual breeze from every direction can get at you; where you have every star in the firmament to aspire to, and the kingdoms of the earth to survey, be prepared to pay for your outlook and to contest the accuracy of the world's definition of success. Or, if you do not want to quarrel with the word, to declare that there are things better than success.

It's rather the fashion nowadays, among college alumni, to speak derisively of the curriculum. "It isn't what you learn in class-room that does you any good," an apologist of this persuasion will tell you. "I've forgotten everything I learned. It's the life—the associations and friendships! I was manager of the foot-ball team my Senior Year, and that did me more good than all I ever learned from Bugs, and Little Greek, or Old Square."

Well, I disagree with that man in—as Prex would say—toto. It seems to me that everything I learned in class-room has come in handy since, although the profession I have adopted—fiction writing—wasn't taught or prepared for at all. They'd be still handier, if I studied harder and learned more. I'd be glad, for instance, if I could read Latin to-day as easily as I can read French. But I am grateful even for the very minute amount of Latin that Professor Hopkins succeeded in inserting into my impenetrable brain. It's remarkable, really, that so small an amount of anything could be so useful. And I'm not talking about its disciplinary value, either, but of plain matter-of-fact serviceability.

No, to my mind, one of the outstanding merits of Hamilton College is that they take seriously the business of teaching you these things. Not technically—not, that is, with the idea of your making a living by them, but humanely, which is with the idea of your making yourself a developed and civilized human being, by them. And the seriousness with which you try to learn those things is their only criterion as to your desirability as a student at Hamilton College. They don't tell you how you're to spend your evenings, nor when you're to go to bed at night. But they tell you pretty much what sort of things you shall study, and they demand recurrent evidence from you that you're really learning them.

Hamilton is a community without any social slums—no undigested mass of dismal outsiders living a barren existence between boarding house and class-room, watching hungrily through the impenetrable plate glass window of caste distinction, an organized social life going on that they have no part in. No man ever graduated from Hamilton College who didn't feel himself in some perfectly palpable way, built into it—a part of the body of it. And, by that same token, every Hamilton man has the old college built into him—a permanent, vital, cardinal thing.

Hamilton is the only college I have ever graduated from. It may be that there are alumni of other colleges who would make the same claims for them, and perhaps (I don't wish to speak incautiously) with a certain degree of truth. I can't pretend to regard as a lost soul every promising, clean young chap who goes elsewhere.

But if they'll just come out to our dear, mellow old place, and take a look, especially if they'll come at the right season—in the Autumn—that is, when the leaves are a glory of heaven, and when they can come from a walk through the neighboring orchards, with a Tompkins County King in each pocket; or in the Winter, when there's sledding on the hill; or in our paradisaical April, when the violets that escaped long ago from Old Twink's garden, are out; or at Commencement Week, when the buds are on.

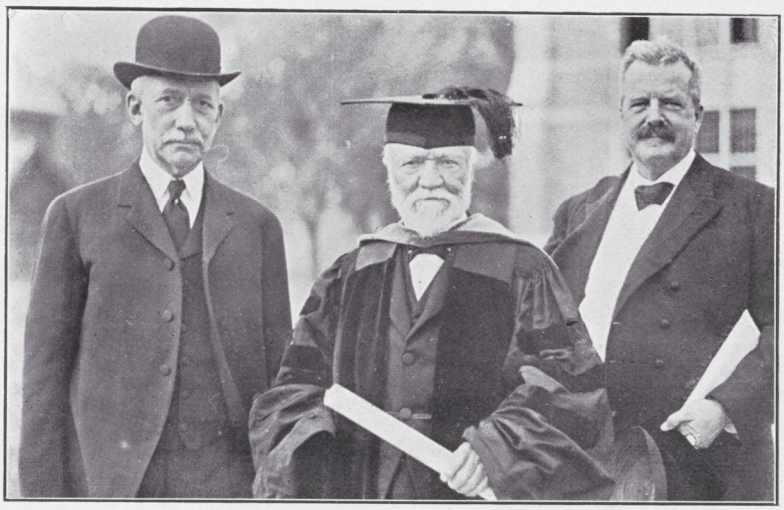
If they'll just come, I say, at one of those favorable seasons, they needn't be afraid of yielding to the insinuating charm of the old place, because it's the real thing! For those that want Old Hamilton's sort of thing, she's got the sort of thing they want.

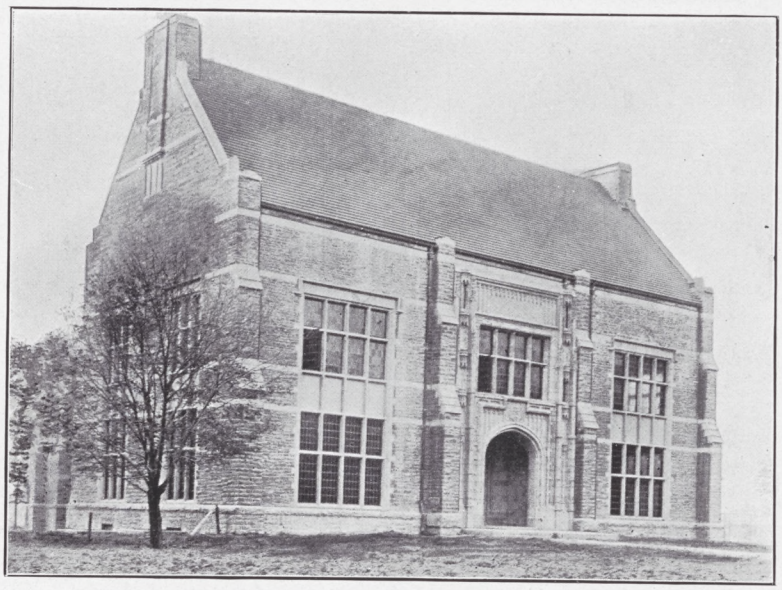
The New Library

THE dedication of the new hundred thousand dollar library building on October 10, 1914, marked an event in College annals. It signalized another addition to the Campus which everyone was pleased to welcome, and it was further distinguished by the presence of Elihu Root, '64, and Mr. Andrew Carnegie. The situation was still more complicated by the disappointing announcement that the name of the donor, so long withheld, would continue to remain unknown.

Senator Root pronounced the words of dedication as Chairman of the Board of Trustees, standing in the southwestern corner of the huge reading room. Grouped about him were the Trustees and before him gathered the student body, who stood during the brief ceremony. Mr. Carnegie was an interested spectator at Mr. Root's right hand. Mr. Carnegie's presence was due to a fortunate circumstance which had led to the conferring of the degree of LL.D. upon him awarded three years before.

President Stryker replied appropriately to Mr. Root's words, promising that the building should be used faithfully and well. The exercises were done in fifteen minutes.





George Norman Woodruff

IN the frank fellowship of college days each man is as a strand in a fabric—the most delicately fashioned yet the most durable one in the world—of which the breaking of a single thread is a loss irreparable.

Death snapped the bond that held George N. Woodruff to us on March 20th, 1914. The message, coming to him sharp and final as it always comes, released him from pain of illness; for us, it meant the first break in the ranks. The news came just as we drew near to the midway mark of our course upon the Hill, as the sphere of life was rounding out about us. There was a shock as we realized that the mystic chain had been broken, and sorrow as we felt the loss of a friend. The clear features of a loved and living man had fallen in a breath to memory and shadow. "Woody" had gone!

"Death stands alone in man's experience and has no parallel upon earth," Stevenson says. Nineteen-sixteen drank of the cup and found it bitter. Three short months earlier "Woody" had been still among us, working and playing in free-hearted camaraderie. His was a serene and genial disposition and he looked for the good in every man. Friends he made in abundance. Then he was forced to fight his way along the way of health. He fought cheerily, but it was a hard road for him and it led into the Valley of the Shadow. Death spread her shadowy wings about him, then enfolded him close. His passing bell had tolled. "Woody" went, smiling.

Senior History

TAKING a jaunt up into the Arctic, serving time in one of those places where they stop you if you try to get out, and a college education, have all one thing in common. It is that, sooner or later, there must be an end. There is an end to the class of 1915.

In the motley, shifting phantasmagoria of the past come the erst departed ghosts of the history that lies behind us, and while we confess a more or less joyful sense of freedom at our release from arduous responsibilities, there assail us small compunctions, tiny prickings of conscience, as we look back over the years. "We have done the things that we ought not to have done and we have left undone the things we ought to have done." For our mistakes, large and small, we are sincerely sorry. But we find comfort in the words of some good defender of mediocrity: "The only people who never make mistakes are dead people. I saw a person the other day who had not made a mistake in three thousand years. He was an Egyptian mummy." Or we might say with Stevenson, "Other men may be right, but so, before Heaven, are we." Or with Lyman Abbott, "The mistakes that have made us men are better than the petty accuracies that have kept us children."

We will not boast our achievements, because that is always done, and we are not like other classes. We have loved our Lady on the Hill, and that must be our defense.

And now the night of our course has come, and we are to set sail on the sterner seas of life. Above us twinkle innumerable "soldier stars, patrolling space." Below us the ocean is treacherous, with mermaids, skilled to sing dirges. But we will go with our eyes to the stars, and the tune of "Carissima" stirring on our lips, down the long lane bordered by poplars, down through the shady arbor, and so out into the world.

JUNIOR

E. A. Wright, Phila.

Junior History

NOW that we of 1916 have passed Sophomore Hill, the climb ahead seems easier. Yet it is not time to pause and glance back along the way we have come. We must be mindful of the rest of the journey. Our teething is over, and our education, almost. Only a little way further, against the setting sun, we may descry the spires of our El Dorado, graduation.

"To be truly happy," it has been written, "is a question of how we begin and not of how we end." Such being the case, our felicity is boundless. We came to Hamilton just as a new era swept the College into a longer stride. The curriculum was radically changed, and we fell into the honor of being the first class to enjoy it. Then that dread arch-demon, The Gym-Show, bared its cloven foot, and we, knowing the evil thereof, destroyed him in our Sophomore year. These and other factors have wrought the change in Hamilton. The new day is born.

Hamilton is dear to us, for she is a good mother and her arms are warm. Service to her shall be our watchword. If our strength will help a team march to victory, or our influence bring a Freshman to Hamilton, we will make service our aim. We have given as much as we were able in the past; more we will give.

Individually, the men of 1916 are true. They bear the Hamilton stamp, from the "Collegii Sigillum" to Mr. Socrates's "Know Thyself," and incidentally have already won possession of the touchstone of loyalty and service. Elsewhere they are depicted and carefully annotated for the edification of future generations.

As Seniors, our opportunity will spread wide, and our hearts must go with it. May we be ranked with the men who have put their shoulders to the wheel and have left us an ideal of Hamilton spirit.

DAVID FARRINGTON ALDRICH, ΔΚΕ Palmyra

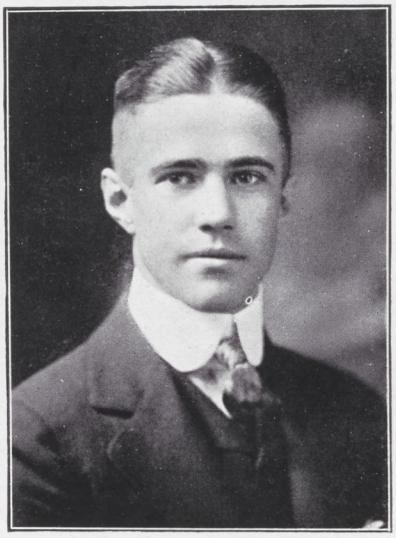
"Dave," "Tick," "Mutt."



Here's little Dave Aldrich, a noisy young boysie,
With ideas of running the place;
His head is inflated—b'gum—supersaturated,
With dope that is commonly called "face."
Now Davy's a lad with eight kinds of crust,
You can tell by his waggle, you see,
For he struts all aroun' with a terrible frown
That says, "I'm the kid—look at me!"

P. S.—Dave is a French shark; is fierce-lookin', and originated the happy dog walk. Also, he is one of Cal's beloved.

FRANKLIN MOSHER BALDWIN, ΑΔΦ

East Orange, N. J.

"Gary."

Man of Mystery. Speed boy.

Has been foiled by nature in repeated attempts to raise a mustache.

One of the intelligent residents of East Orange—Banks is not the other.

Cal's pet debater—and really, fellows, he isn't such a bad bluffer!

Adviser-in-chief for the Alpha Delts.

Reported to have gone out for Assistant Track Manager Freshman year.

"Such a girlish face Mr. Baldwin has!"

HAROLD ALBERT BANKS, Α Δ Φ East Orange, N. J.

"Hal."

Jes' naturally devil.

Can save more time than any man in College—by never working.

Says he acquired his slim type of architecture eating at Commons.

The Original Waslos.

An awfully high jumper—but can go higher when he wears his elevated expression. (You know that sweet look he saves for Sunday in Prexy's choir).

CHARLES JOSEPH BAUMER, Ψ Υ Syracuse

"Charlie."

Our Prize Package from Syracuse—and as usual, we got stung!

Parlor fiend at H. Seely's.

Musically unbalanced—looks like Beethoven and plays like ——

Says his nose gets in the way when he tries to kiss a girl.

First name ought to be Isadore to keep the motif.

Has for his motto, "When in Rome, do as the Chermans do."

Friend of Hank Holt's!

CHARLES STANLEY BERGNER, E. L. S. Utica

"Stan."

Nice-looking.

Not heard very often, but makes a big noise when he gets started.

Instrumental in College affairs—plays the piano in the band.

Stands firm to principles, but changes them every two weeks.

Leading spirit on Deputation trips to Ute and environs.

One of the Christian evidences (see Fenn).

Says Goodenough rooked him on a deal for College organist.

A noise—that's all.

HUDSON COVERT, A Δ Φ Chicago, Ill.

"Hud," "Fish."

Meat-yards product.

Has lots of civic pride; says Chicago was built on the lake shore to show its contempt for water.

Rose to fame on wings of Y. M. C. A. deals.

Oh, wonderful example! Smokes, chews, gambles, drinks—not; and always has his lessons!

Exponent of chaste masculinity.

Is so tall that a little goes a long ways with him.

Mother Covert.

FREDERICK RAY CRUMB, E. L. S. Oxford

"Freddie," "Crumbkin."

Got lost in the 1915 book, but we found him with an X-ray and had him shot*.

How about the '15 Prom, Crumbkin! The little rascal!

Is hitting the hard stuff again—studying Rocks!

Says his intellect is much bigger than a molehill (statement is justified by his massive stature).

Consistent bohner, but otherwise normal.

*Shot means photoed.

"Pete."

Has three other middle names, showing his Irish descent. The names are Augustus, Heinrich and Adolphus.

The Unshorn Dutchman.

Originator of the Calabash Smile.

Grins while he eats, talks.
walks,
studies,
in classroom,
and on the public streets of Utica!

Artie Miller says it won't come off.

When playing pinochle says, "Whose GIVE is it?"

HOMER WOODHULL DAVIS, ΔΥ Coram

"Dink."

Diminutive Devil; also Bustling Boy.

You have to look twice to see him.

Our little organizer.

Started the Art Club so he could get his picture in the HAMILTONIAN again.

Bluffs eighteen hours a week.

Destroys domestic felicity in Cal's debate class.

Coram business man.

LEON ARTHUR DAVIS, E. L. S. West Winfield

"Mose."

Dairy descent.

Possesses spanked baby complexion—due to over-exposure.

Unknown nationality, but you would think he was a German to hear him pronounce French. Also, has individual pronouncing system for English. Ask Chub.

Says he is going to leave his brain to advance science. What science?

Proved false to Bill Squires' trust. (Auctioned off the exam papers).

Disappeared from football squad after gym-show season.

Friend of the working girl.

MERWIN MILTON EELLS,
A Δ Φ Utica

"Mer," "Ver."

Smooth guy.

Reminiscent of Stink's Chemistry course.

Considers using his ears for wings and making a transatlantic flight.

Awful artist—can draw a crowd in two minutes.

Can't help being superior—he is, you know.

Revised funeral oration: Friends, Romans, Eells, lend me your ears!

HENRY COURTENAY
FENN, E. L. S.
Pittston, Pa.

"Hank," "Hen."

Heathen Chinee. Imported from Cathay.

Press Agent for the Chinese Empire.

Great reformer and isn't happy unless he has a cause.

Ought to have been born in 1775.

Bum photographer.

Another Christian evidence (see Gardner).

Petraloffscoff — hoonchoochi—iski—wishei!

PHILIP ALLISON FULTON, E. L. S. Massena

"Phil," "Jock."

Mouse. Last seen about the campus Sept. 18, '12.

Knows lots, but keeps it quiet, and is believed to be secretly working for a Key.

Great athlete—in Massena, N. Y.

Slipped up in Ute a month ago and broke every bone in his pocket-book.

Likes to be coaxed.

Favorite of Schnitz'.

Chronic kicker.

JOHN HAMISH GARDNER, ΔKE Ft. Covington

"Jack."

Perfectly proper.

Leads an insanely undisturbed existence.

Name shows that he's descended from Ham, which accounts for the dark look on his face.

Beloved of dance girls.

Won to Bill Shep's graces after long struggle.

Neatest man in College.

One of the Christian evidences (see Jones).

HERBERT CLAPSADDLE GETMAN, ΘΔX Oneonta

"Herb."

Can't pronounce his own name—says he is going to make one for himself when he graduates.

Ought to have been bred in Boston, where the motto is "We live, and move, and have our beans."

Says he can't get the hang of the Fox trot—he always starts on his partner's wrong foot.

Keeps the Gow twins from fighting, and otherwise industrious.

Giddy kid.

MILLARD ROBERT GOW, ΘΔX Springfield Center

"Little Conversation Gow."

One of the Bovine twins.

You couldn't tell 'em apart except for their middle names.

This is Der Gow.

Says he is boss of the family (see below).

Member of S. P. S. F. (Society for the Prevention of Sleep of Females).

Used to live in Utica and come out to classes. Don't bother about the classes now.

"Would be a good guy if he didn't have to go around with his brother."

Has a system of changing classes with brother, so it's a wise prof. that knows which Gow is what.

This is right fielder Gow.

WILLARD ARCHIBALD GOW, ΘΔX
Springfield Center

"GOO."

Possesses similar family traits to the foregoing.

This is Die Andere Gow; also bovine.

Says he is boss of the family (see above).

Does not care for the bright lights of Ute; believes in conjugal felicity.

Has a wistful look acquired waiting for the bell to ring.

Wears a diamond ring; brother carries a bracelet. 'Nother mark of identification.

"Would be a good guy if he didn't have to go around with his brother."

This is center fielder Gow.

FREDERICK ADAMS GRIFFITH, ΔΥ Palmyra

Here's to Grif, the boy athlete!
Who covers third with both his feet!
The way he bohns is somethin' tuff,
For he kids the Fac. with lots of bluff.

Also, Freddie is a naughty boy. He talks out loud in classes, and makes Hank Clark blush. He wears a perpetual grouch.

He is a general floating rib for the College.

OWEN GRIFFITH GROVES,

"Grubby."

Takes himself seriously.

Has been trying to swing a bluff for two years that he is as good a man as his brother. Can't convince anybody.

Here is a boy of lofty brow,
As lofty as the laws allow.
Owen. he knows, you may be sure,
What's doing now in littry-choor!*

*Owen says littrychoor is only one of the many subjects he's bright in.

Talks like his mouth was full of butter.

CHARLES ARTHUR HAWLEY, E. L. S.
Verona

"Neitzche."

Plato the Second.

Tin horn orator.

Enjoys kidding Bill Squires.

Bill made a chart of his mental processes which looks like that well-known futurist drawing, "Nude Descending a Staircase."

Profound philosopher: says that the sausage is the connecting link between man and beast.

Oh, gaze upon this model beast,
Defunct ten thousand years at least!
This boy can reason a priori
As well as a posteriori!

RALPH HENRY HENTY,
ΔKE Knoxboro

"Hent."

Wished on us by '15. A bum wish!

Possessed of a cute face, and one of the cutest bits of intellect on the Hill! Note the word "bits."

Says he is keen for farming —particularly when it comes to cultivating waist places.

Believed to have led a wild life when younger. Smokes occasionally now.

Shines in Knoxboro society, where he delights the populace with his native wit (agricultural).

WILLFRED ROWELL HIGGINS, ΑΔΦ
Minneapolis, Minn.

Long, elegant and needs shaving.

Suffers from an intellectual countenance.

Has to get up at six to dress for Chapel.

Cawn't say that he knows much. But, gawds, what a superb bluffah!

Bill submitted the following poem on himself:

Bill, you're too fair for mortal speech,
Enchanting, positively rippin',
You are some dream, and quelque peach
And beaucoup pippin!

HARRY MILTON HOLT,
ΨΥ Lowville

"Hank."

Like Fatimas—Distinctively Individual.

Knows more jokes than any man alive: this is a rare picture, Hank in a sober moment.

Awful fusser. "If my blue-eyed baby were only here!"

Never at a loss for words in classroom. Says it isn't necessary to know something in order to talk about it.

Happy-go-lucky.

This is Henry, sweet as May,
Waiting here for Judgment day.
Hank preserves a cosmic ca'm,
Caring not a cosmic dam
What may come!

ROBERT INSLEY, E. L. S.
Nanuet

"Bob."

Pinkly proper.

Youthful Adonis. Sunkist complexion. Also, light headed (see photo).

Aspired to football, track, musical clubs, et al., Freshman year.

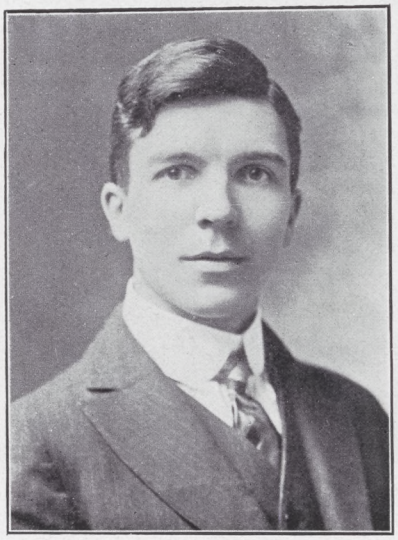
Still Aspiring.

Displays same family traits of energy as Tubb.

Says he is going to be an artist's model so he won't have to work.

King of the banquet busters (1914).

Some say he came from Jersey,
Conveying a little note.
But Bob says he came from Nanuet,
A-riding on a goat.



EVAN ELLIS JONES,

E. L. S. Utica

"Eve."

Super!

Lost poet; sleek politician. Observe the lean and hungry look which he acquired ward heeling in Ute.

Reformed? Well, no, just flirting with his conscience.

Gets addressed "Rev. E. E. Jones."

Friend and political ally of F. M. D.

Candidate for the Valedic. before Frosh exams.

Fluctuating figure—may be an atheist.

FRANCIS PATON KIMBALL, E. L. S.

Sauquoit

"Kim," "Frantz."

Middle initial stands for publicity.

Reg'lah littratcha stude—ask Chub!

Began writing at four but did not publish anything that year.

Says he's some tickler when it comes to typewriter keys.

Otherwise unclassified.

Put the ban on all wuff scurfs in the HAMILTONIAN in order to hide a mysterious past.

Swore off smoking on a two-dollar bet with McNair. Don't possess two dollars. So smokes just the same.

CHARLES DELL KNAPP, E. L. S. West Winfield

"Charlie."

The hirsuteless Babe.

Shaves with a Brush.

Six feet of sleeping sickness. Has been in love since he was two.

Daily question, "Where's my letter?" (Utica postmark).

Track man—says he could beat Banks by a foot if there wasn't anybody around.

Played pinochle exam week.

Took a Dinq in Clark because he was too lazy to keep a notebook.

THATCHER MCKENNAN, ΨΥ Utica

"Thatch," "Mac."

Plain nut.

Habitué of the wilds of Utica—says he can find his way around in the dark. (That's what comes of being born there).

Perpetually confused with his Syracuse twin brother. Brother says he often gets taken in for Thatch.

Had the nerve to swipe a book on G. Potter!

Bohns thirteen hours a day on Bill Shep. Result, Flunked!

Rooms with Ducky Swan for contrast.

CHARLES MCLOUTH, JR., ΔKE — Palmyra

"Jud."

Sweetly serious.

Madly in love with the curriculum.

Has some brain, but thinks it's a whale.

Daily program—eat, bohn, bohn, bohn, sleep.

Denies that he is working for a Key. Wants to be surprised. Maybe he will be.

Tightwad—Wouldn't even tell a story at his own expense!

"Gee, fellows, I'm going to flunk this cold." Result, H. H.

Cal's pet debater, and otherwise unfortunate.

GEORGE SCHOLEFIELD MCMILLAN, AΔΦ — Yonkers

"Mac."

L'Enfant Terrible.

"Yuh big stiff, yuh!"

Short and nervous. Busy when he hasn't got anything else to do.

Buys white pants so he can draw pictures on them.

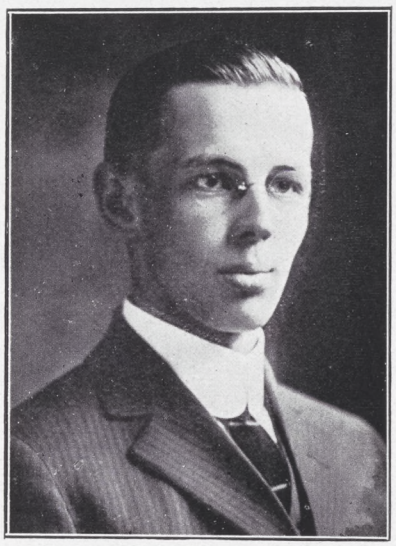
Says the curriculum is a joke, and tries to make the Fac. believe it.

Director of Intramural Sports by inheritance.

Likes to play with Artie Miller.

So small he can't get into the movies without a parent.

Had to grow a mustache, carry a cane and smoke a pipe Prom week so the girls wouldn't take him for a freshman.



ELBERT BARNEY MATTOON, E. L. S.
Windham

"Matty."

Hard-headed.

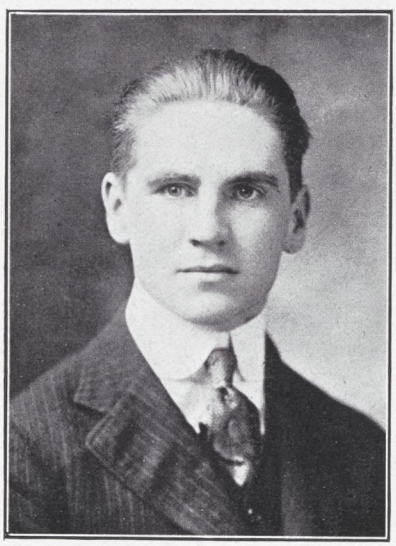
Overdosed with the milk of human kindness.

Exponent of brotherly love—also sisterly. One of the Christian evidences. Pastors a flock in England (not pastures).

Like Josh Billings, is one of the best men Hamilton ever turned out.

Says he is going to graduate with '16.

Over-elected eight hours to please Hy Nichols.



ARTHUR MILLER, E. L. S.
Dolgeville

"Scotty," "Art."

Hoot mon!

Here's a little Scotch. Get that canny look?

Thinks he is Harry Lauder II, but can't get away with it.

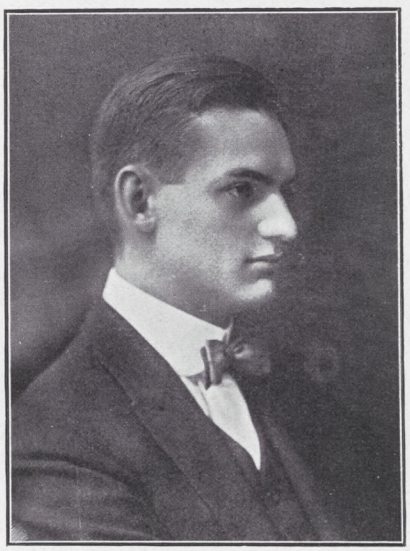
Baseball star. Oh, lady, watch that throw to second base!

Says Steve Royce owes his rise to his wonderful catching.

Prefers prize fights to the movies.

Studied two weeks Junior year; rest of time played pinochle with Pete.

Friend of the working girl (see Davis).



LOUIS HEYL NICHOLS,
A Δ Φ Buffalo

"Hy."

German descent and hasn't gone very far.

"I'm right and you're wrong. so don't try to argue."

Speaks German like a native of Iceland.

Feels aggrieved if a prof. marks him below 9.8.

Complete compendium of all facts and figures.

Associates with Dink Davis, and is otherwise mercenary.

GEOFFREY AIRLIE
OGILVIE, X Ψ
Richmond Hill

"Jeff."

Whence and what are thou, execrable shape?

Mammoth lump of protozoa. Only time he is serious is when he is throwing a bluff (profs. kindly take the hint).

Has to pay excess baggage charges when traveling.

Cal—"We can't all be Ogilvie's." Right!

Kills every man who gets in his way during football games by falling on them.

Twenty-two inches between the eyes, and they feed him with a shovel. Otherwise normal.

The Fat Ogilvie.
The Happy Ogilvie.
The Bluffer Ogilvie.
The Third Ogilvie.

MONTFORT SCHLEY PAIGE, ΘΔX . . Albany

"Monty."

From his name he ought to be at least an admiral or a juke.

Has carefully removed the brogue from his voice but he can't change his looks.

Smokes like Trot Chase.

Got a medal in Bible Freshman year. Poetic injustice!

W. Gow's confrere. They both want to be tough.

May be bright, but needs polishing.

Prom girl: "Hasn't that Mr. Paige a typical Irish face?"

VINCENT STONE PECK, ΣΦ Utica

"Budge."

Behold this mighty Dinosaur
Famous in prehistoric lore,
Not only for his weight and strength,
But for his intellectual length
You will observe by these remains
The creature has great mass of brains,
And he can think without congestion
Upon both sides of every question.

Admits he's the handsomest man in College.

Says he's the link referred to by Hawley (see above).

His motto: "Kindness in women, not their beauteous looks, shall win my love."

GEORGE VAN WYCK POPE, ΣΦ Glencoe, Ill.

"Van."

Football hero. Says he's going to run the team this year.

Reg'lar heller when he gets out with Jeff, but Sunday School guy in between.

Member of Independent Order of Specs at Junior Dinner.

Used fraternity pull to get into Prex's choir.

Unmitigated bohner.

Says one can't be a strong eater at Commons. You soon get weak.

WILLIAM NELSON ROBSON, ΔΥ

Worcester, Mass.

"Robby."

The Village Loafer.

From Cultured New England.

Business man—walks around and looks wise.

A ballroom star—a big dipper. Also, social climber.

To paddle in the social slush
Is Robby's darling hope.
So o'er him schoolgirls gently gush
And listen to soft soap.

JOHN WILLIAM RUSHMORE, JR., ΔΥ

Palmyra

"Speed."

Old Man-of-the-Sea.

Self-appointed Fire Marshal.

Built for Speed, not for beauty.

Tells how "Honorable Ladyes sought my love, which I denying, they fell sicke and dyed."

After Prom was heard to remark that he didn't have to study Economics to find out about the high cost of lovin'.

Possessor of a Brick Blake voice.

RIPPLE CARY SMITH, XΨ

West Pittston, Pa.

"Rip."

Imitation Centaur—

Has a Humpty-Dumpty figure, and a fishy look.

Has got a high opinion of his ability to please women. J. Whit says it's unfounded.

Looks like the rooster in Chanticleer when he wears a dress suit.

Great favorite in Clinton moving picture society. Says he has to act as censor.

Spent a whole summer cultivating a mustache to be sported Junior year.

Owns a clarinet in the College band. They let him carry it in the parade.

Wears prison shirts.

PHILLIP WALDRON STONE, A Δ Φ

Cornwall-on-Hudson

"Deke," "Phil."

Clerical mien.

Highly intelligent, without displaying the fact.

Doesn't talk much, but it's a question whether his silence is golden or ivory.

Took beauty lessons from Mother Covert Sophomore year. Result, a complexion that any woman would be proud to wear.

A democrat—the kind of man who walks along the street with you and then says he is not afraid to be seen with anybody.

VILAS MATHESON SWAN, Ψ Υ Ogdensburg

"Vi."

Name shows ornithological descent.

Claims that "Ducky" is a misleading appellation. Says he can prove he isn't web-footed.

Supes by mathematical formula.

Brighter than he looks. (Hence, similar to B. Peck).

When in Ute always orders German dishes.

Great believer in the efficacy of efficiency—as well as the egotistical cosmos.

An ardent camp follower of Elbert Hubbard, and wants to be like Webster.

Is building an ark for himself.

ROBERT SHERMAN THORNE, E. L. S. Geneva

"Bob."

Amorous swain.

Swallowed his voice in infancy.

Mildewed complexion.

Single-minded chap—always looking out for No. 1.

Has dreams of Fair Women.

Was camp follower of Chub Ristine till Chub found him out. Now has to get out his lessons.

Came to Hamilton to advertise Hobart.

JOSEPH EAGER WHITCOMBE, X Ψ Batavia

"Joe," "Holy Joe."

Never talks out loud unless under compulsion.

Likes to smoke, but can't stand a pipe.

A bum himself but tries to keep his younger brother straight.

Goes to church on Sunday, and leads an otherwise strenuous life.

Protests against the exacting demands of the Faculty.

Has an idea that he knows something about Llt, and makes nauseatin' remarks to that effect.

Studies with a phonograph.

FREDERICK ELMER WILLIAMS, E. L. S.

Walton

"Fred."

The Great God Clam!

Moves in a mysterious way and talks out of depths of unknown intelligence.

Says it's a violation of the Laws of Nature to Shave—believes every little thing should take its course.

Goes to sleep in classes to avoid being called on.

The pepless wonder.

Sophomore History

MELODIOUSLY have the tones of the old chapel bell rung us through almost half of our course. The class of 1917 has twice seen the Hill change her autumnal fairy garb to the piling drifts and rushing blasts of winter, and these again to the paradise of spring. May we see it many times again.

We entered the largest class that Hamilton ever had. It is true that many have gone from us, and equally true that many more will be on the list of the missing at the final roll call. But if we have lost quantity we still have quality. So let us be content.

As regards our class honor, this year we have gloriously retrieved ourselves. While Dan Chase and Bill Marsh entertained the Frosh, 1917 strolled down the Hill, and departed to Syracuse for the annual family spread. Though ambushed on our return, we won against overpowering odds, and many Freshmen kept company with certain little fishes that swim in the gymnasium pool. In the class rows we have held our own, as '16 and '18 know full well.

The winds brought to our ears the tale that Hamilton needed men to defend her honor. So it was that last year eight men of '17 faced the camera in the picture of the football squad. This year we did almost as well. We have our track men, before whom many records have fallen. Our regret is that "Beany" is lost to us. Would that once again we might see him sailing over the bar at dizzy altitudes.

So it is that we go on. May the wish of all classes, to leave behind an immortal name in history, be granted to us, should it be that we are deserving. But as for the future may it be for the honor and glory of our Alma Mater that "We shall fight with glorious might,

As in the days of yore."

I'M A FRESHMAN
KICK ME

E. A. WRIGHT BANK NOTE CO., PHILA.

Freshman History

TO the classic strains of the first Greek yell ever to awaken the elusive echo amid Hamilton's hills, the class of 1918 has marched well through the first year of College. We promised to be a large class, and as events proved, we were much too large for the Sophs.

Our first social activity took place when we marched up the hill singing "Rust, Rust," etcetera. We rushed the Sophomore fire brigade and then did the next proper thing very thoroughly with the business end of a brush. With hallowed minds we issued from chapel one bright morning to have hospitable '17 fall upon our necks. Shortly after they furnished many a one of us a soft abode upon the greensward, so much do we appreciate hospitality.

So we have progressed, losing the track meet and baseball series to be sure, but retrieving these mishaps with a banquet at which no man was absent. The Sophs rode on the same train with us back from Union, but they never got an idea. They had to read about it in the papers next morning. Later the Sophs ran away banquetward as fast as they could, while we were anchored in two exams. As that was a very clever stunt, we handed them a tribute on their return by a private arrangement with the Arbor hydrant. This was received with undue haste and chilly appreciation, all of which did not worry us.

But under our green hats Hamilton spirit has been thriving. We have given and taken freely with the Sophs, because it makes us more Hamiltonian; and we respect the sanctity of the upperclassmen. We are working in practically every line of College activity and are striving determinedly to add a few more laurels to "our own sweet lady"—Hamilton.

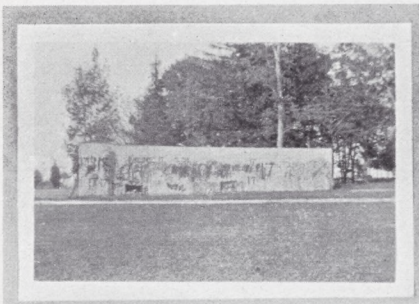
"This is the Life."

COLLEGE days compress myriad points of goodfellowship into the span of four years. They reveal the real college, that which lies deeper than ivied buildings or tree-strewn campus. In them occurs many a good-natured escapade; the time-honored rivalry of Frosh and Soph with its rows, races, and attempted banquetings . . . and all of it the clean and manly sport of youth.

From that momentous "Paint Night" the Frosh, he of the Green Hat, is received into College life. He learns his College yells, and songs, and learns to respond when the magic initials of his own class are sounded. So he rushes along until Bible Exam, last of the year, when, with the aid of a friendly paddle administered by his classmates, he attains that inexplicable state of Sophomoric freedom in which he is allowed the privilege of smoking a pipe and wearing a red hat.

So, stage by stage, the little Frosh who once trembled at the Soph battle cry sounding over the dusky campus, becomes learned in the Things of Life. He gains in dignity, and, in upperclassman years, learns to command with the hilt of a cane, with an "Up, Freshman!" "At 'em, Soph!"

There is one song that all Hamilton men, undergrads or alumni, sing with bowed heads and swelling hearts—"Carissima." They sing it after football games, standing in a circle about the Gym steps, heads bared; they sing it as a finale at College dinners, Musical Clubs concerts, and play it as a last waltz at Junior Prom. It is the most wonderful song ever written, and no Hamilton man ever sung it without a catch in his throat. Its Latin title is a good one, for this fair high hill is for us the dearest place on earth.



Carissima

The General Association

UNDER this name is conducted the business of The Charlatans, The Musical Clubs, Hamilton Literary Magazine, the College Band, Debating Teams, Intramural Sports department, and the Baseball, Football and Track departments. The members of the Association are the student body, all of whom pay an athletic tax. The business of the Association is conducted at College meetings or College dinners upon call of the President.

Managers for the activities above mentioned are elected at the next College meeting after the season for that activity closes. At that time also assistant managers are elected from the Freshmen or Sophomores who have been candidating for the positions. The candidates' names are placed before the College by the Manager and balloting is then held. General discussion of College matters is held at these College meetings.

Football History

"Pete"

A DECISIVE victory over St. Lawrence which marked the shattering of a "hoodoo" of five years standing, a clean-cut triumph over Hobart to offset a tie of the previous season, and a defeat from Union are the outstanding features of the 1914 Football season.

The game lost to Union, while regretted, is counterbalanced by the memory of a stirring victory over the Garnet in 1913, and Hamilton is content to await the coming fall. The season brought three victories and four defeats, and while costly in scoring, was nevertheless successful. The team had to be entirely rebuilt under "Pete" Reynolds's skilful tactics from a nucleus of four veteran men. Of these four, some had to be shifted to unfamiliar positions to strengthen the pivot-points Green material completed the line-up.

The value of the 1914 season is that it laid the present foundation. This fall the Coach will have a strong nucleus of seasoned men whom he has taught a working knowledge of the game. In "Pete" Reynolds the team has a Coach whom it has known for a year and whom it likes. "Pete" knows Football from the ground up, and he knows how to handle his men. The student body is behind him, and are looking for a big time this fall. Spring practice is held for the first time in years.

The team entered on its season with lack of confidence due to inexperience. St. Stephens proved an easy victory. But Syracuse clearly outclassed the Buff and Blue by an 81-0 score. N. Y. U. and R. P. I. proved their superiority in hotly contested battles, for Hamilton had not hit its stride. Hobart and St. Lawrence fell much-desired prey, and the Union game at Schenectady closed the season.

A Word About Baseball

AT the date of writing the 1915 baseball season has just opened and only a partial forecast of the work of the team can be made. Only three men of last year's team were lost. Captain Royce, whose phenomenal pitching last year was the strongest asset of the team, will be sorely missed, but there are seven candidates to take his place, two of whom, Daniels and Whitman, were broken in last season.

Behan is well able to cover the ground at short, where Rothensies leaves a place to be filled. The rest of the team has been playing together already for two successful seasons, practically in the same positions now occupied. Captain Erhardt, Higgins, and Griffith have shown before that they can hold down the three bases as tight as could be wished for. Miller, behind the bat, was in the best form of his career at the close of the 1914 season. The outfield is under the ample wings of the brothers Gow and looks air-tight.

The batting of the whole team last year, after a few weeks of practice with Coach Toerner, was exceptionally good. This year it should be still stronger. The squad is much larger than that of last year, and second-string men will not be wanting in an emergency. The diamond is being made shipshape while the out-of-town games are played, and when the work is finished will give every opportunity for fast infield work. There is every reason to hope for a long string of victories which will equal that made by the 1914 pennant winners.

Hamilton's First Big Leaguer

THE fact that "Steve" Royce decided finally that he had rather be a lawyer than a big league pitcher is not the most vital consideration to his College, at least from an athletic standpoint. The really significant thing is that he was one of McGraw's favorite recruities during the summer of 1914, and has been given a standing offer by John B. Foster, secretary of the club, of returning to the Giants any time within two years in case he changes his mind.

"Steve's" record in College circles is so well known that repetition is not necessary, but any one will concede that "Steve" kept us all guessing. He might have been picked for the Boston Americans, Cincinnati Reds, Chicago White Sox, Washington Americans, and a few others. But for a time he steered clear of the game entirely.

Shortly after graduation in June he became annexed to the Binghamton team of the State League, whence, before playing a game, he was transferred to New York by McGraw. The rest of the season "Steve" traveled or rested with the Giants, warming the bench like every other recruit, and regularly warming up his arm to McGraw's catchers. New York sporting writers declared he was "the most likeable college man in baseball," and predicted that McGraw would provide him with a permanent berth. Cy Young and other veterans praised Steve's control.

With the coming of fall, however, true to his Hamilton instincts for learning, "Steve" began to cast fond eyes on a law course, and despite the urgings of the Giant manager, he signed up at N. Y. U., where at present writing he remains.

As Hamilton's first Big Leaguer, to you, Steve, we hand the laurel!

Track History

THE season of 1914 was the most successful that a Hamilton track team has ever passed through. The team was very well balanced with Captain Lee in the short distances, Boyce, '17, in the long distances, Shepard '17, in the pole vault, and Jessup, '14, in the weights.

The greatest sensation of the season was Shepard in the pole vault. At Colgate he broke the N. Y. S. I. A. U. record at 11 feet 6 inches and carried off a first in each of the meets. His loss is the greatest blow to this year's team. Fritz Lee showed further development. His quarter mile at Colgate in 49 4-5 seconds was one of the wonders of the season. Last summer Fritz ran with the Irish-Americans.

Among innovations established last year were a training table at Commons and the elimination of the annual interscholastic meet. The same policy will be followed this year with the addition of a change in the interclass meet. As it interferes with the other meets it will this year be put first.

The 1915 season opens with the Pennsylvania Relay Carnival at Philadelphia on April 23-24, in which Hamilton is competing for the first time in her history. This marks an unprecedented event in track history, and is an indication of an unusually successful season, according to Coach Risley. The team retains the stars of last season with the exception of Jessup and Shepard, and is drawing from a strong squad. The N. Y. S. I. A. U. meet will be held at Utica under the auspices of Hamilton and Colgate.

Intramural Sports

Director, GEORGE S. MCMILLAN, '16

THE season of 1914-1915 has been on the whole a very successful one for the Department of Intramural Sports. Beginning with the Fall Tennis Tournament, the interest in the many winter activities which help to fill the long months between Football and Baseball seasons has never lagged. Inter-Fraternity basketball games have had even larger attendance than during the previous season, while the Indoor Track Meet saw several records broken, and in the general attitude of co-operation with which it was received around College, more than justified its being held. Soper Gymnasium has been a busy place during the past winter.

The basketball season was hard fought and interesting. The star work of Root, a Freshman, was a feature of the season, but the veterans Banks, McLouth, Higgins, and Paige displayed their usual speedy form. Manager McMillan placed these four men and Behan on his selected first All-Star Team, with Root, Fulton, Erhardt, Pope, and Griffith on the second team. The Alpha Delta Phi team captured the Inter-Fraternity cup, which had been previously held by the D. U.'s. The Sophomores proved their class supremacy by defeating the Juniors and Freshmen in the annual series.

Musical Clubs History

THERE have been years when there were much finer voices and far better individual entertainers in College, but there have been few seasons of such generally satisfying programs. From the very first, the odds were against any clubs at all. Many good men were graduated the year before, and an unusually small amount of material came in with the Freshmen. Rumors that there would be no trip went abroad and threatened to disorganize the Clubs altogether. At the last minute, Weed, the best tenor on the Clubs, became ill and had to disorganize the Clubs altogether. At the last minute, fully, and held together in spite of all obstacles.

It was evident at Clinton, where the first concert of the trip was given, on the night College closed, that the season would be successful. Saturday the stop was Brooklyn, in a blizzard that challenged the memory of the oldest inhabitant, but there was a good house, and almost double the receipts hoped for. Tuesday night at Tarrytown was a combination appearance with the Charlatans. Thursday afternoon at Yonkers was good fun, but was a matinee performance and lacked the "pep" of an evening date. That night was given the best concert of the trip, at Jamaica. Hempstead, the next date, was a good concert, in some phases better than the Jamaica concert, though not up to its general average. There never was a place to finish a trip like Glen Ridge. The audience could not get enough. All sorts of experiments were tried, and everything got by with a bang.

Addie's "War Song" will ring in people's ears for many a week, and whoever heard "Chinatown" as rendered by the Instrumental Clubs, will remember the season with genuine pleasure.

Charlatans' Review

WHEN College opened in the fall the outlook for The Charlatans was complicated by the fact that there were only two men left from last year's cast. When the tryouts were announced more than thirty men responded and from this number an excellent cast was chosen.

After many weeks of careful reading President Jessup, '15, decided on Frederick Ballard's comedy, "Believe Me, Xantippe." It was a type of play very different from those produced in former years. For a long time its success was doubtful, but under the efficient coaching of Frank Lea Short, who has been with us for the last two years, the cast soon showed its ability. President Jessup as MacFarland in the leading role rivaled Jack Barrymore. Penn Orr, '17, appearing for the first time in any Charlatans' production, deserves the greatest praise, as do all the other members of the cast.

The Charlatans took a longer trip than last year. There were six performances given. The first was presented in Utica at Prom. time. Although it was the first performance, it went off in professional style. Productions were also given in Oneonta, Tarrytown, Oneida, Cooperstown, and one more in Utica for the benefit of the Nurses of the Utica Homeopathic Hospital. The reception of the Club at all these places proved the unquestioned success of the play. That the Charlatans have made a name for themselves this season has been shown by the numerous requests for performances next year. "Bullieve Me, Xan" was well-suited to the players and the audiences that managed to cram the houses when the Charlatans appeared would agree that The Charlatans are reg'lar Thespians.

Great Year for the Y. M. C. A.

THE Y. M. C. A. has launched on the progressive policies of the new President, John H. Gardner, who was elected before the Easter vacation, and promises to keep to the high standard set by the previous administration. President Gardner says that he will lay especial emphasis upon the College field during his term of office, but will continue pushing ahead the advance guards which were established about the county by Ex-President Kimball.

Gardner has a large work before him in maintaining the deputation and missionary work inaugurated by "Dud" Kimball. Under Kimball the work of the Association was felt throughout the county as it has rarely been felt in its history. Probably more college men have become interested in Y. M. C. A. work during the past year than for many past generations. Twenty-eight men conducted Boys' Clubs in Vernon Center, Kirkland, Franklin Springs, Chadwicks; founded new Sunday Schools and maintained the old ones; assisted at the Utica Y. M. C. A. and the Mary Street Italian Mission; and taught at Westminster Church, Christ Church, and the Utica Orphan Asylum. Clinton work has also flourished unusually.

The local efforts of the Association during the past year were confined to Bible study classes, prayer meetings, and an excellent lecture course which brought such men as Hon. Coe I. Crawford, U. S. Senator from South Dakota, to the Hill.

Junior Dinner

Hotel Utica

March 13, 1915

(From Hamilton Life, issue of March 17): "Thirty-four Juniors, all bent on getting outside of six specially arranged courses, sat down to the annual class banquet in Hotel Utica at 7 o'clock Saturday evening. The six courses were arranged by a committee headed by and composed of Vilas M. Swan (in whose culinary instincts President Pope ventured to repose confidence for the occasion). In spite of the fact that Hank Holt was not present, President Pope managed to keep the pep going. Each one besides having the li'l purpose of food annihilation, had li'l ideas of an amusin' nature to convey during the evening. Swan thoughtfully omitted all German dishes from the program and deserves all kinds of credit for a highly edible 'feed'."

The Advertiser

I am an advertiser great!
In letters bold
The praises of my wares I sound,
Prosperity is my estate;
The people come,
The people go,
In one continuous
Surging flow.
They buy my goods and come again,
And I'm the happiest of men,
And this the reason I relate—
I'm an advertiser great!

There is a shop across the way
Where ne'er is heard a human tread,
Where trade is paralyzed and dead,
With ne'er a customer a day.
The people come,
The people go,
But never there.
They do not know
There's such a shop beneath the skies
Because he does not advertise!
While I with pleasure contemplate
That I'm an advertiser great.

The secret of my fortune lies
In one small fact, which I may state,
Too many tradesmen learn too late.
If I have goods, I advertise.
Then people come
And people go
In constant streams,
For people know
That he who has good wares to sell
Will surely advertise them well;
And promptly, I reiterate
I am an advertiser great!

Vacation or Vocation ?

You will be graduated in June. Have you prepared for the practical side of life—you who must earn your own living?

It is serious business, requiring careful preparation. Will your academic education enable you to command a dignified position and a salary commensurate with your expectations?

American business offers thousands of opportunities and lucrative employments to those who are qualified for them.

Double Your Salary

by learning to do the work for which employers pay well from the start. Don't be one of the thousands of untrained High School and College graduates who will go to work at common little clerkships this summer paying $5 a week, or less. Build on your education, prepare yourself for a paying position, as private secretary, bookkeeper, certified public accountant, office manager, or business manager.

Remember, the race is not always to the swift. Systematic training must be added to natural ability.

Write TODAY for information about the SUMMER TERM AT EASTMAN, and courses adapted to home study for intelligent young people. Eastman has started more than fifty thousand successful business men. Founded 1859. Prospectus on request.

Albany Law School

The course of study leading to the degree of LL.B. extends over a period of three years. Students who have pursued one or two years in a law office may enter the second year class as a candidate for a diploma, but not a degree.

The high standard of the school and the facilities which the city affords with its legislature, courts and library offer unequaled opportunity for a thorough and practical training.
